Look out for lead : what happens during an environmental lead assessment of my home? – 2019-07

OCLC#: 1121044837

An environmental lead assessment is a visit to your home by trained staff to help identify possible sources of lead. The nurse and an EPA certified lead risk assessor will come to your home. They will ask you questions to help find possible sources of lead. During the visit, the lead risk assessors will use a machine, called an X-ray fluorescence (XRF) analyzer. The XRF machine can check painted surfaces, inside and out, and help the assessors identify lead hazards. The visit might take a couple of hours, depending upon the size of the house, the condition of the paint, and other factors.
