An Examination of the Effects

Foreword:

The presumed intent of Act 166, amending South Carolina Statute 16-25-10, was to deter initial and repeated acts of domestic violence by increasing the penalties for criminal domestic violence. This legislation increased the amount a person convicted of domestic violence is to be fined and increased the amount of time to be served. It also contained less and non-punitive measures such as required treatment for first time offenders and training for members of the judiciary. However, public policy initiatives designed with a specific intent, are at times confounded by unforeseen and unintended consequences. There was concern that Act 166 might result in the unintended consequence of individuals arrested for an offense that should be considered criminal domestic violence, evading the enhanced penalties by being charged with an offense other than criminal domestic violence. This report represents a “first cut” at using existing data to see if such an unintended consequence actually occurred.

This report represents the collaborative effort and cooperation of three agencies. The State Law Enforcement Division, which is responsible for maintaining the Computerized Criminal History Records, more commonly known as “rap sheets,” approved use of these data for the purpose of this analysis and provided technical assistance as needed. The Department of Public Safety, Office of Justice Programs provided oversight and funding for the Office of Research and Statistics at the Budget and Control Board, as part of the State Justice Statistics Program for Statistical Analysis Centers, to conduct the statistical analysis required to address the concern regarding unintended consequences.

This publication was funded from Federal Grant Number 2005-BJ-CS-K015 from the United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics. Points of view or opinions stated are those of the principal investigator and do not necessarily reflect the opinion or official position of the United States Department of Justice.

Introduction:

In June 2005, the South Carolina General Assembly passed ACT 166 (Attachment I) amending Section 16-25-10, as amended, of the South Carolina Code of Laws, 1976. This Act, among other things, increased the penalties and fines for a person who commits criminal domestic violence. This Act took effect on January 1, 2006.

The Department of Public Safety (DPS) contracted with the Office of Research and Statistics (ORS) of the Budget and Control Board to:

“... determine if recently enacted legislation (Act 166 of the 2005 – 06 legislative session, amending 16-25-10) enhancing the sanctions for criminal domestic violence (CDV) may have had the unintended effect of the charges of individuals arrested for criminal domestic violence actually being convicted of offenses other than CDV.”

Specifically, ORS was charged with the following:

“Using the computerized criminal history records (CCHR) as maintained by the State Law Enforcement Division, the Office of Research and Statistics (ORS) will identify two cohorts based on the arrest charge literal codes. The first will be a cohort of individuals charged with criminal domestic violence (using literal codes) with arrest dates between and including July 1 and December 31, 2005. The second will be a cohort of individuals charged with criminal domestic violence with arrest dates between and including January 1 and June 30, 2006. By comparing the literal description of the arrest charge to the court docket record (CDR) disposition code, ORS will determine for each of the cohorts the rate at which CDV charges were changed and to which offenses CDV arrest charges were changed.”

ORS is a repository of State agency databases, including the adult criminal history records (CCHR) database that the State Law Enforcement Division (SLED) maintains. (A complete inventory of ORS’ State agency databases is shown, graphically, in Attachment II.) ORS not only “warehouses” state agency databases, but also utilizes these databases in conducting research and statistical analyses at the request of public and private entities.

Before ORS can utilize an agency’s database, it must request, and be granted, permission from that agency to use its database for the purpose for which it was requested. ORS requested, and received, permission from SLED to use the adult CCHR database for this project.

The CCHR contains arrest and disposition information on all arrestees, ages 17 and older. The CCHR “extract” that ORS receives from SLED does not include those arrest offenses that have been expunged, nor does it include those arrest offenses which result in a disposition of “pre-trial intervention.”

Description of Analysis:

There are three general types of arrestees of criminal domestic violence that can be observed in the CCHR:

- Individuals who are arrested for criminal domestic violence and who are also charged with other violent and/or non-violent offenses such as kidnapping, criminal sexual assault, murder, assault and battery with intent to kill, assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, trespassing, public drunkenness, disorderly conduct, drug and alcohol offenses, etc.
- Individuals who are arrested for only one offense – CDV, but who may be convicted of several offenses, which may or may not include CDV.
- Individuals who are arrested for only one offense – CDV, and who are convicted of only one offense, which may or may not be a CDV offense.

The presence of other non-CDV arrest offenses, along with the CDV arrest offense, complicate and confound the analysis which could result in erroneous conclusions. For this reason, these types of criminal records are included in the analysis for information purposes only. The primary focus of this analysis will be on those offenders who were arrested for only one offense (CDV) but may have been convicted of one or more offenses, or may have not been convicted at all.

This analysis examines two time periods: 1) July 1, 2005 through December 31, 2005 – a six-month period of time before Act 166 took effect (January 1, 2006), and 2) January 1, 2006 through June 30, 2006 – a six-month time period after Act 166 became effective. The logic for selecting these time periods was to provide similar time frames for making comparisons from before and after enactment of the legislation, and to provide an adequate time lapse between arrest and disposition in order to obtain the most complete disposition data possible. All arrests for CDV that occurred during these time periods, if they were entered into SLED's CCHR database, are included. For this analysis, ORS is utilizing an extract of SLED's CCHR files that it received in August 2007; therefore, any arrest and disposition information that was not entered into the SLED database by that time was not included in this analysis. This means that if a law enforcement agency did not send to SLED arrest information regarding a CDV arrest that occurred during this time period (July 1, 2005 – June 30, 2006) by August 2007, or that information was received by SLED, but it was not recorded in SLED's CCHR database by August 2007, then that information was not included in this analysis. Of course, this applies to court disposition information as well.

Results of the Analysis:

Arrested for CDV and Other Offenses:

The following table (TABLE 1) shows the total number of arrests for CDV for the two time periods under review. Between July 1, 2005 and December 31, 2005, there were a total of 6,331 arrests for CDV. During the 6-month period after passage of Act 166, there were a total of 6,512 arrests for CDV – a 2.86 percent increase in the number of arrests after passage of the Act.

Over 75 percent of the arrest offenses, 81.1% before and 78.6% after passage of the Act, were for Criminal Domestic Violence 1st Degree. It is possible that in many cases, the arresting officer charges the offender with Criminal Domestic Violence 1st Degree because s/he is unaware that the offender has had a previous CDV conviction. Also, the solicitor may decide, after reviewing the elements of the crime that the offender should be charged with an offense that is different from the original charge. The CCHR does not indicate what offense for which the offender is actually adjudicated.

Arrested For Only One Offense – CDV:

Table 3 shows that during the 6-month period before Act 166 became effective, a total of 6,269 offenders were arrested for CDV, and that offense was their only arrest offense at that time. (Note: offenders may be arrested multiple times for CDV during this time period.) As with the previous table, the majority of arrests are for CDV 1st offense (81.3% before, and 78.8% after). Criminal Domestic Violence of a High and Aggravated nature (8.8% before, and 10.9% after) is the second leading CDV arrest offense, followed by CDV 2nd and CDV 3rd and subsequent.

Table 4 shows the disposition of the CDV cases before and after Act 166 became effective on January 1, 2006. In both time periods, more than half (52.1% before, and 60.8% after) have no disposition. This could mean that CDV cases take a long time to be adjudicated. The fact that 60.8 percent of the cases had no disposition after Act 166 took effect would seem to indicate that a longer period of review is needed to determine the effect of this legislation. Also, arrests of CDV of a High and Aggravated Nature before the Act became effective were found to have “No Disposition” in 48.1 percent of the cases and 69.6 percent of those arrested after the Act became effective had “No Disposition.” This may mean that the amount of time it takes to adjudicate a CDV arrest is lengthy and the analysis needs to adjust for the time lag between arrest and final disposition.

Of those cases that were adjudicated, only 17 percent of the offenders arrested before Act 166 were found “Not Guilty” and 13.8 percent of the offenders arrested after Act 166 were found to be “Not Guilty.”

Table 5 shows the average length of time, in months, between the arrest date and the disposition date, for those cases that were adjudicated during this time period. On average, “Not Guilty” dispositions took longer than “Guilty” dispositions.

Tables 6 and 7 show, for those individuals who were arrested for only one offense (CDV) and were convicted of only one offense, the percentage of cases where a CDV arrest resulted in a non-CDV conviction, before and after passage of Act 166, respectively. Both before and after passage of Act 166, a non-CDV conviction occurred in less than 10 percent of the cases - 9.1 percent before Act 166 became effective, and 9.5 percent after Act 166 became effective. Attachments III and IV show the arrest offenses and the conviction offenses, before and after passage of Act 166, respectively.

Conclusions and Recommendations

Based on the analysis of the data as presented here, the answer to the primary research question, “has there been an unintended consequence of criminal domestic violence charges being changed to other offenses in order to avoid the sanctions associated with the new legislation?” is no. During the six month period prior to enactment of the legislation, 9.1% of criminal domestic violence victims were convicted of an offense other than criminal domestic violence. After the legislation went into effect, 9.5% of criminal domestic violence victims were convicted of an offense other than criminal domestic violence. It is also important to note that the number of criminal domestic violence arrests actually increased 2.9% during the six month period following enactment of the legislation. This is an indication that law enforcement behavior, as measured by volume of criminal domestic violence arrests, did not change in response to the legislation, or at least did not attempt to limit the scope of the legislation. Additionally, the time lapse between arrest and disposition decreased for the post-enactment cohort compared to the pre-enactment cohort. Delay in the time from arrest to disposition constitutes not only a threat to public safety and fairness, but to the efficiency and effectiveness of the court process.

It is important, however, to note the limitations of these findings. First, the analysis is based on the comparison of two relatively short time lapses of six months. It is possible that a more extended time period might show different results, particularly as the defense process adjusts to the realities of a new judicial situation. Second, in comparing the last six months of 2005 to the first six months of 2006, it is impossible to control for any seasonal effects. This is particularly important regarding arrest volume which often demonstrates a seasonal pattern for particular offenses. Since the comparison is between the last six months (pre-enactment) of the year and the first six months (post-enactment) of the year, the analysis cannot account for seasonality. Third, individuals charged with multiple offenses were excluded from the final comparison, due to the complexity of such situations. As an example, if a defendant was initially charged with criminal domestic violence and public drunkenness, but convicted only of public drunkenness, does this demonstrate a criminal domestic violence charge that was dropped as an unintended consequence of the legislation, or an initial charge of criminal domestic violence that was unfounded? Fortunately, only 2.1% of the criminal domestic violence arrests in this analysis involved multiple arrests. Fourth, the degree to which no disposition was reported is a factor that is difficult to interpret. Among the pre-enactment cohort, 52.1% had no reported disposition compared to 60.8% for the post-enactment cohort. We lacked sufficient information to determine if this difference is the result of the pre-enactment cohort having more time to complete the judicial process, hence more cases were disposed; or if the difference is the result of defendants prolonging the judicial process in the hope of avoiding enhanced sanctions. Both are plausible explanations and neither can be eliminated within the framework of this analysis. Also unknown is the degree to which no disposition represents missing data.

Given these limitations, this finding should not be regarded as the definitive answer to concerns regarding the impact of this legislation. Several other analytic approaches should be considered in the future. Among them:

Replication of this analysis over a more extended period of time. This would have two benefits. First, it would lessen the limitations associated with any initial adjustment period, seasonality and missing dispositions. Second, it would provide better data for analysis directed at determining the impact of the legislation on time to disposition, over an extended period of time.

Similar analysis using automated judicial records. Judicial records might lend a different perspective as well as a greater level of detail concerning dispositions, than is available from the CCHR data.

Case study level analysis. There may be a level of detailed information that is not contained in automated records that might be contained in non-automated case records. Such an approach might also provide information concerning the circumstances associated with cases where the arrest charge of criminal domestic violence results in a disposition for another offense.

Any future analysis should take both the findings and limitations presented in this report under consideration.

SECTION 2. Section 16-25-20 of the 1976 Code, as last amended by Act 92 of 2003, is further amended to read:

“Section 16-25-20. (A) It is unlawful to:

(1) cause physical harm or injury to a person’s own household member; or

(2) offer or attempt to cause physical harm or injury to a person’s own household member with apparent present ability under circumstances reasonably creating fear of imminent peril.

(B) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a person who violates subsection (A) is guilty of the misdemeanor of criminal domestic violence and, upon conviction, must be fined not less than one thousand dollars nor more than two thousand five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty days. The court may suspend the imposition or execution of all or part of the fine conditioned upon the offender completing, to the satisfaction of the court, and in accordance with the provisions of Section 16-25-20(I), a program designed to treat batterers. Notwithstanding the provisions of Sections 22-3-540, 22-3-545, and 22-3-550, an offense pursuant to the provisions of this subsection must be tried in summary court.

(C) A person who violates subsection (A) and who has been convicted of a violation of that subsection or of Section 16-25-65 within the previous ten years is guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, must be fined not less than two thousand five hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars and imprisoned not less than a mandatory minimum of thirty days nor more than one year. The court may suspend the imposition or execution of all or part of the sentence, except the thirty-day mandatory minimum sentence, conditioned upon the offender completing, to the satisfaction of the court, and in accordance with the provisions of Section 16-25-20(I), a program designed to treat batterers. If a person is sentenced to a mandatory minimum of thirty days pursuant to the provisions of this section, the judge may provide that the sentence be served two days during the week or on weekends until the sentence is completed and is eligible for early release based on credits he is able to earn during the service of his sentence, including, but not limited to, good-time credits.

(D) A person who violates subsection (A) after previously having been convicted of two violations of subsection (A) within the previous ten years or two violations of Section 16-25-65 within the previous ten years or a violation of subsection (A) and a violation of Section 16-25-65 within the previous ten years is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, must be imprisoned not less than a mandatory minimum of one year but not more than five years.

(E) A person who violates the terms and conditions of an order of protection issued in this State under Chapter 4, Title 20, the ‘Protection from Domestic Abuse Act’, or a valid protection order related to domestic or family violence issued by a court of another state, tribe, or territory is guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, must be imprisoned not more than thirty days and fined not more than five hundred dollars.

(F) Unless the complaint is voluntarily dismissed or the charge is dropped prior to the scheduled trial date, a person charged with a violation provided in this chapter must appear before a judge for disposition of the case.

(G) When a person is convicted of a violation of Section 16-25-65 or sentenced pursuant to subsection (D), the court may suspend execution of all or part of the sentence, except for the mandatory minimum sentence, and place the offender on probation, conditioned upon:

(1) the offender completing, to the satisfaction of the court, a program designed to treat batterers;

(2) fulfillment of all the obligations arising under court order pursuant to this section and Section 16-25-65; and

(3) other reasonable terms and conditions of probation as the court may determine necessary to ensure the protection of the victim.

(H) In determining whether or not to suspend the imposition or execution of all or part of a sentence as provided in this section, the court must consider the nature and severity of the offense, the number of times the offender has repeated the offense, and the best interests and safety of the victim.

(I) An offender who participates in a batterer treatment program pursuant to this section, must participate in a program offered through a government agency, nonprofit organization, or private provider approved by the Department of Social Services. The offender

(B) A person who violates subsection (A) is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, must be imprisoned not less than a mandatory minimum of one year nor more than ten years. The court may suspend the imposition or execution of all or part of the sentence, except the one-year mandatory minimum sentence, and place the offender on probation conditioned upon the offender completing, to the satisfaction of the court, a program designed to treat batterers offered through a government agency, nonprofit organization, or private provider approved by the Department of Social Services.
