ABSTRACT

This document provides a transcription of what is identified as Books 2 through 8 of J.W. McCormick, a funeral home doing business in Columbia, South Carolina during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. These volumes include individuals passing through the McCormick Funeral Home between April 1906 and June 1915, including patients of the S.C. State Hospital who had family able to pay for burial costs, as well as white and black citizens primarily of the Columbia, South Carolina area.

The information includes the decedent's name, last place of residence, their age, the cause of death, the attending physician, the death date and the burial date, the location of the funeral and burial, who was to pay for the funeral, and then listing of itemized costs - such as washing the body, "preservation" (embalming), the casket (including a description and cost), information on the handles used (if something out of the ordinary, i.e., involving extra cost), the use of a vault, clothing costs, and other funeral costs (such as the hearse), and cemetery charges.

In sum, the record provides a unique means of tracing the development of the funeral industry in Columbia - a relatively small fall line community - as well as tracing the development and utilization of different services by the death industry. In addition, the record provides a unique genealogical opportunity - providing death and burial related information at a time prior to mandatory South Carolina death certificates (which begin in 1915). Although the McCormick firm apparently served primarily white clientele, there are records for a small number of African American citizens - suggesting a willingness on the part of McCormick to provide services regardless of race.

We have previously published the transcription of McCormick Books 1 and 2. The former publication (Trinkley and Hacker 2004a) provides information on other undertakers and funeral directors in Columbia, as well as the different cemeteries available to Columbia's citizens during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The latter publication provides information for about 2 ½ years, from December 1903 through April 1906 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b), and provides additional background on diseases, coffins, and other aspects of the funeral home business.

These volumes are being provided through the courtesy and assistance of the Dunbar Funeral Home in Columbia, South Carolina.

THE VOLUMES AND DATA ANALYSIS

The Volumes

The volumes measure 12¼ by 10¼ inches and are bound in black leather with red leather reinforcements at the corners and on the spine. This red leather is accented with gold. On the spine, stamped in gold, is "REGISTER," and below that the numeral 3 through 8. Below that is a paper label, heavily damaged, with the inclusive dates of the individual volumes. The individual sections are sewn in with thread. On each inside front cover is the label for the R.L. Bryan Company, 1225-1227 Main Street, Columbia, S.C., instructing, "Duplicate Order by this Number No. 80457."

At the front of each volume are index pages columnar ruled in double red lines, with side cloth alphabetized tabs. Each individual numbered page is a printed burial form (see Figure 1). At least in theory this ensures that the same information was collected for each client, although as review of the data reveals, this was often not the case. Pages are numbered from 1 to 504.

The volumes were primarily McCormick's means of tracking burials so he could invoice clients. Each burial is associated with an itemized cost and each page includes a ledger to allow the account to be maintained.

We probably do not need to emphasize how unique these records are. For South Carolina there are only one other set of funeral home records published – those of the J.M. McConnelley from Charleston and covering the period from 1889 through 1897 (Smith 2001). A search of internet sources reveals that when such records have been tackled by genealogists they almost always focus exclusively on the basic information – names, dates, and burial locations. All of the other exceedingly rich information is ignored. This is a tragedy beyond comprehension – funeral home records provide resources and information that are simply not available from other sources. As readers will see in the McCormick materials, this includes information on cause of death (unavailable prior to death certificates), expenditures on burial goods, changing attitudes toward death and remembrance, local customs and burial practices, and local cemetery customs.

While this information may not immediately be seen as within the realm of genealogical research, that is a myopic view. Funeral data help provide a profoundly rich family context – helping current generations better understand the pain, suffering, hope, and expectations of their ancestors. Moreover, we all have a responsibility to the past and, if not preserved in their entirety, these records will be lost to future generations of both scholars and family researchers (and the two are not mutually exclusive). We hope that our efforts with the McCormick records will spur others to search out and preserve similar records in their communities.

The McCormick Firm

A more complete account of Columbia's undertaking firms can be found in Trinkley and Hacker (2004a), but here we will only briefly outline the history of the McCormick firm.

By at least 1903 the firm of McCormick and Pletscher, located at 1440 Main Street, was advertising that they were the successors to M.H. Berry (Walsh Directory Company 1903, 1905). By 1910 J.W. McCormick advertised himself as the successor to McCormick and Pletscher. The 1924 Columbia Directory lists a new firm, the Dunbar Funeral Home, along with J.W. McCormick (at 1217 Hampton).

By 1950 the J.W. McCormick firm had changed its name to the McCormick Funeral Home in keeping with a growing trend and moved from its 1217 Hampton address to 1510 Hampton (Hill's Directory Company 1950). The McCormick firm is listed for the last time in 1959. In 1960 it was listed as Oaklawn Funeral Home, still at the 1510 Hampton Street address (Hill Directory Company 1960). By 1961, however, Oaklawn had moved to a new building at 3926 Devine Street (Hill Directory Company 1961). Also in 1961 the "undertakers" listing was dropped by the Columbia City Directory.

In 1962 John Dunbar, Jr. purchased the Oaklawn Funeral Home on Devine Street, creating the Dunbar Devine Street Chapel, allowing expansion into a new and growing section of Columbia (Anonymous 1984:6).

The Dunbar Funeral Home acquired the McCormick records through their acquisition of the Oaklawn Funeral Home and it is to their credit that these early records were maintained and preserved.

The Transcription

The transcription follows as faithfully as possible the original material. Misspellings are generally corrected (except where there is some uncertainty in the original meaning). There are also some pages with multiple entries. Some appear to represent burials for which relatively little information was available and others represent the sale of materials (such as a coffin or other materials) to fellow funeral directors around the state. These are included for historical purposes, although they do not reflect burial or genealogical information.

We were confronted with a great deal of information beyond what the average genealogist would want - information on the coffin, the costs of various clothing items, information on where the funeral took place, as opposed to the burial, and so forth. We have attempted to include as much of this information as possible for each burial, believing that it offers a unique opportunity to trace the development of different funeral services, better understand the costs associated with these services, evaluate social implications of different burial activities, and so forth. We have, however, made the decision not to include detailed payment information. We've noticed that McCormick was relatively successful in obtaining full payment and relatively few debts were written off.

We have converted many, but not all, of the costs to 2002 dollars. The conversion used is $1 (1910) to $20 (2002).

Data Analysis

Although there are 3,626 entries in the volume, there are actually only 3,116 detailed burials of named individuals. The remaining 510 data entries may indicate only first names or may lack names entirely. While they are likely relatives of those paying the bill, we cannot be certain the deceased had the same last name. There are also entries for other businesses, likely other funeral directors, for whom McCormick provides either services or goods. These include at least four recognized African American undertakers - C.A. Ferguson, D. Cooper, J.F. Lopaz, and Hardy, Pinckney & Biggs.

C.A. Ferguson made five purchases - two were for embalming fluid (at $2.25/gal) and the remaining three were for ¼ dozen bale (bail) handles each (at $1.50, or 50¢ each). D. Cooper made 10 purchases, including 8 coffins ranging from $14 to $65. He also paid McCormick for eight embalming jobs, at $10 each, and for four other services, such as the rent of a wagon or hearse. J.F. Lopaz acquired four coffins, ranging in cost from $6 to $37.75 and eight rentals of a hearse (at $3-5 each). Hardy, Pinckney & Biggs purchased one coffin and one robe. While the prices charged were always the same prices charged the general public (in other words, the black firms either did not seek, or did not receive, any professional discounts), the exchanges document at least some degree of inter-racial cooperation among funeral directors during Jim Crow.

McCormick also sold to, or had business with, other funeral directors, such as Bobo Undertaking (location unknown), Barclay & Brandon (Atlanta, GA), Greenville Undertaking Company (Greenville, SC), and Noland Brown & Co. (Asheville, NC). There are other listings that are probably undertakers, such as Baxter & Sons, Craig Furniture Co., R.L. Shular, Shelton & Nash, Kennedy Brothers, and T.H. Auld & Sons.

There were also 75 "cash sales," indicating that McCormick was willing to provide coffins and other goods to private citizens who were still taking care of death out of their own homes. The firm also provided services directly to organizations such as Columbia's Rescue Orphanage, the Salvation Army, Epworth Orphanage, Knowlton's Hospital, and Granby Mill. There were also six cases directly billed to various railroads, for services related to various railroad accidents.

There are 21 entries for Jones Transfer Company in the volumes. The items listed range from carriages to bales of hay. It seems likely that these entries are not for accounts receivable, but for charges incurred.

The books also provide a rare glimpse of how lodges in the Columbia area were providing burial benefits to their members. The McCormick volumes include references to 11 difference lodges in the "Bill to" category. These include the Acadia Lodge American Free Masons No. 94; the B. of R.T. 794; B. of R.T. 312; Columbia Chapter RAM; Columbia Commandry #2 Knights Templar; Columbia Lodge 106 Knights of Pythias; Masons of Camden; Omar Temple, Columbia Commandry; Order of Rail Conductors; and Richland Lodge No. 39, American Free Masons.

Turning to the 3,116 entries for which there are named individuals, 354 of these are African Americans (listed in the book as "colored" as was the white practice at the time). This represents about 11.3% of the entries - although in 1910 about 54% of Richland County's and 44% of Columbia's citizens were African Americans.

Most of these African Americans (308 or 87%) were patients of either the "Asylum" or "State Park" (these are distinct from those listed by Trinkley and Hacker 2004a). An additional four were prisoners. Consequently, 88% of the African Americans handled by McCormick were under contract. Only nine were listed in private residences within the city, eight from outside of town, and three from local hospitals. This reveals that in terms of private business, McCormick actually did very little undertaking in the African American community - by this time clear racial lines had been drawn -- at least in the mind of the public - between "white" and "black" undertakers.

There are several African American residences of some interest. For example, Mary Stevens, who died at age 70, is listed as living on Elmwood Avenue, in an area known as "Scuffletown." This is a reference that we have not previously identified and is likely pejorative - similar to "Black Bottom," "Shanty Town," or similar terms. It likely refers to a collection of wood frame dwellings to the south of Elmwood, in the vicinity of the river.

We also find two African Americans dying in Mrs. C[harles] Logan's yard - likely a reference to still-standing "servants' quarters" in the rear of Logan's house on Assembly Street. These individuals, Sarah Salter and Angie Johnson, were both buried in Irmo; the bills of $108 and $117 ($2,160 and $2,340 in 2002$), paid for by Mrs. Logan, indicate the funerals were relatively elaborate. A third individual, 86-year old Henry Parker, died on the "Taylor Plantation." The very modest bill of $45 ($900 in 2002$; there was no embalming) was covered by B.F. Taylor.

While we will discuss a number of different issues, the reader should keep in mind that we have no way of determining if the sample in the McCormick volumes is representative. Certainly the small number of African Americans present makes that sample suspect. The much larger sample of whites may, or may not, be truly representative of the general Columbia population and without much more extensive study we cannot be certain. Nevertheless, we believe the size - 3,116 - makes the sample relatively reliable and worthy of close examination.

Age of Death

When we look at the African American sample we find an average age at death of 41. Whites had only a slightly longer average life span of 47 years. In this case it seems that the African American sample is heavily biased by exclusion of children less than 15 years old (likely because most of the black sample comes from the State Hospital, itself a bias). Nevertheless, if we exclude children less than 15 years old from the white population, the average white life expectancy increases to 49 years.

Beardsley notes that in 1910 black males in the United States could expect to die 4 years earlier than white males and black females could expect to die up to 9 years earlier than white females (Beardsley 1987:17). Urban areas were even worse for blacks during the first quarter of the twentieth century (Beardsley 1987:24).

When only whites (with a far larger sample) are considered, it is possible to develop a mortality graph (Figure 2), revealing the percent dying by age classes. There is a steadily rising chance of death from birth to a peak between 1 and 10 years. The rising peak is probably the result of the gradual reduction in immunity as the infant reduces nursing and is switched to other food sources. There is a drop during the ages of 11 to 20, then an increase and plateau during the work years between 21 and 60. The death rate peaks at 61-70 and gradually falls from there. This is very similar to that found for the far smaller sample from Book 2 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b).

Cause of Death

Of the 3,116 burials, a cause of death is listed for 2,556 individuals, or 82% - a far higher proportion than found in Book 2 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b). Nevertheless, many were from the State Hospital and this undoubtedly biases the sample to some extent.

If we combine all of these individuals together the most commonly listed cause of death was pellagra (accounting for 20.5% of the deaths). This is a diet-deficiency disease caused by a prolonged insufficiency of niacin and closely associated with poverty - although this would not be clearly demonstrated until 1916. The first case of pellagra in the United States was documented in 1902 and quickly became associated with the “3-Ds”: diarrhea, dermatitis, and dementia. Death results from multi-organ failure. Pellagra conditions can be seen throughout the list of other death causes, including neuropsychiatric and gastro-intestinal conditions.

Regardless, pellagra is not listed as the cause of any death in McCormick Volume 2 (1903-1906) and is not found in the current study until 1908.

We note also that of 524 pellagra deaths, 479 (91.4%) were from State Hospital patients. Of the remaining 45 deaths, 27 are from Columbia area hospitals or care facilities and 18 are from private residences. It appears, therefore, that this cause of death is inflated for the general population.

Diseases of the kidneys or urinary tract account for at least 221 deaths (8.6% of the total). These are listed as nephritis, Bright's Disease, and uremia. Nephritis and Bright's Disease are essentially the same and reflected an understanding that the kidneys were inflamed. Gunn comments that,

The attention is usually called to the condition by an increase or decrease in the amount of urine passes; puffiness or swelling of the eyelids and feet. A convulsion may be the first indication of Bright's Disease. Pain in the back may or may not be present. If some of the urine is boiled, a white, feathery mass is formed throughout the urine [indicating the presence of albumin] (Gunn 1901:271).

Uremia was recognized as the collection of waste products in the blood as the kidneys were unable to function. "These waste products collect in the blood and act as a poison to the entire body, but especially upon the nervous system" (Gunn 1901:272). In fact, Gunn notes that the disease may be mistaken for epilepsy.

There are 216 causes of death that we include under "mental defects." These include such causes as "acute mania," "acute melancholy," "exhaustion senility," "senile insanity," and "senility." Like pellagra, most of these are reported for patients at the State Hospital, although non-institutionalized individuals are also represented. It is difficult to interpret from these terms the actual diseases, but they could reasonably range from true mental illness to alcoholism to syphilis.

Tuberculosis, often described as "general tuberculosis," "pulmonary tuberculosis," or "consumption" in the volume accounts for 216 deaths (8.4%). One period text explains that "consumption, or phythisis, is the popular name applied to a disease in which the chief outstanding and prevailing symptom is a rapid or gradual wasting away of the body, accompanied by fever, associated with the loss of strength and enfeeblement of all the bodily functions . . . the essential part of the disease is termed tuberculosis" (Corish 1923: 671). Beardsley (1987:13) comments that in 1900 TB was the most frightening and deadly of all the health problems faced by blacks or whites. Although one to two decades later other diseases were of near equal importance, TB was still a significant killer.

Heart disease is the fourth most common cause of death, listed in 153 cases (or 6%). Listings include "heart disease," "heart failure," "heart trouble," "valvular heart disease," "cardiac dilatation," and "angina pectoris."

The next most common cause of death was pneumonia, accounting for 129 deaths (5%). Beardsley explains that, "in the pre-penicillin era, pneumonia carried off great numbers of whites and blacks, operating as a kind of executioner after victims had been substantially weakened by other illness" (Beardsley 1987:16).

Cerebral hemorrhages, "cerebral apoplexy," and "cerebral congestion," and "apoplexy" account for 116 deaths (4.5%). All are the modern equivalent of a stroke and Gunn describes apoplexy as, a disease characterized by a sudden loss of feeling, consciousness, and the power of voluntary motion. Its immediate cause is internal pressure upon the brain, from congestion or effusion. It is most usually produced by the escape of blood from a ruptured vessel of the brain (Gunn 1901:389).

Number eight on the list is not an organic disease, but rather the broad category of

"accidents" – accounting for 97 deaths (and 3.8% of the deaths). In this category are burns (10), trains (17), automobiles (5), other accidents (10), poisoning (8), drowning (13), electrocution (8), drug habit (1), fractures leading to death (21), and tetanus (4). At least one other death cause could have been included, but were not – gun shots (30) while potentially accidental were more often indicative of violent crimes.

The poisonings are of special interest and include one from laudanum, one from arsenic, two from mercury, one from morphine, one from opium, one from "illuminating gas," and one from "pot. candia" (probably a mangling of potassium cyanide). The "illuminating gas" poisoning might have been from acetylene, one of the primary ingredients in early lighting gas, but in general this medical term related to asphyxiation by carbon monoxide – a by-product of the open flame.

Bowel complaints and typhoid complete the top 10 of death causes. The category of "bowel complaints" includes such causes as "enterocolitis," "gastritis," "gastro enteritis," "ileo colitis," and "intestinal obstruction." Together these account for 89 deaths (3.5%).

Typhoid fever accounts for 76 deaths (3.1%). Typhoid fever is caused by the bacterium Salmonella typhi and is characterized by fever, diarrhea, headache, eruption of rose-colored spots, and intestinal inflammation. While common during the nineteenth century, it was gradually eradicated during the twentieth with improving sanitation.

Below these top 10 killers were cancer, syphilis (also identified as "general paralysis"), epilepsy (although in so far as the defining feature was seizures, it is likely that this was listed as the cause of death for a great many diseases, including syphilis), septicemia, gun shot wounds, influenza (also known as La Grippe), still or premature birth, meningitis, malaria, appendicitis, diabetes, and diphtheria. Finally, 381 cases are lumped together as "other."

Several of these bear brief mention. Influenza was recognized as an endemic or epidemic contagious disease and even at this time its seriousness was fully understood. Patients were to be watched carefully and it was understood that individuals, in a seriously weakened condition, generally died of complications (Gunn 1901:337). Hays notes that pandemics have been documented at least from the eighteenth century, although the most serious of the pre-twentieth century pandemics occurred in 1889-1890. The next significant occurrence was the 1918 pandemic (Hays 1998:270). Generally, however, death was from complications that took hold of the weakened patient.

Malaria, while not as deadly as TB, was as debilitating. The McCormick records regarding malaria are especially interesting since prior to WWI it is impossible to document the seriousness of the problem. While a common and well-known Southern problem, it was little discussed for fear of discouraging outside investment (Beardsley 1987:48).

Meningitis is a viral or bacterial infection of the tissues or fluid surrounding the brain and spinal cord. The bacteria are typically spread from person to person by coughing, sneezing, or direct contact. Meningitis may also be caused by a variety of other agents, including Haemophilus influenzae Type b - perhaps the most virulent influenza serotype. Viral meningitis has a relatively low mortality rate, although bacterial meningitis, prior to antibiotic treatment, was very lethal.

Diphtheria is a disease of the respiratory passages transmitted by droplets from person-to-person. The bacterium creates toxins that may cause severe heart damage, coma, or death in 5-10% of the cases today.

Figure 3 shows the incidence of the various causes of death in the McCormick records. When this is compared to the list prepared from Volume 2 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b) there are some noticeable differences. As mentioned earlier, pellagra was not even listed as a cause of death in the earlier records. For these earlier records the most common cause, TB, accounted for 15% of the deaths, compared to only 7% in the current sample. Syphilis accounted for 6% of the deaths in the earlier sample, but only 3% in this study. And influenza accounted for 4%, while this study shows it accounting for only 1% of the deaths.

Regardless of the differences, these volumes continue to suggest that Columbia, in the first several decades of the twentieth century, was in the transition period from "the age of receding pandemics" to "the age of degenerative and Man-made diseases" in the words of social demographer Paul E. Zopf, Jr. Infectious and parasitic diseases are still extracting a heavy toll, but we are also seeing a number of deaths caused by heart disease, cancer, and strokes.

Death Dates

There are 2,870 death dates provided in Volumes 3 through 8 – spanning the period of mid April 1906 through early June 1915. Figure 4 illustrates a simple graph showing the month of death for these 2,870 cases.

The monthly death rate varies from a low of 13 to a high of 63, with an average of about 26 a month. This is a significant increase (44%) from the average of about 18 bodies a month between December 1903 and April 1906. If only non-State Hospital deaths are compared (319 for the earlier sample and 1,855 for the current sample), the average monthly deaths are 11.4 and 16.8 respectively – or a 47% increase.

This increase is far greater than what can be accounted for simply through the growth of Columbia (for example, the 1900 census reveals 21,108 people while in 1910 there were 26,319, an increase of only 24.7%). Nor can it be explained by State Hospital business.

McCormick may have been doing very well in business, cornering Columbia's death business. Certainly McCormick had very little competition. Only Van Metre was in business throughout the study period. E.F. Matterson was in competition only for the first year of these records and D.F. Collicutt was in competition for only about two years around 1908-1910.

Alternatively, there may have been a noticeable, perhaps even alarming, increase in Columbia's death rate. Histories such as Hennig (1936) provide no insight. We imagine, however, that sanitary conditions were still questionable in Columbia, well into mid-century.

Figure 4 reveals that deaths peak in May and again in November. In both cases the death rate was not sustained, but rapidly declined. It appears that deaths increased at the change of seasons, perhaps affecting the weak and sickly.

After these deaths, the remainder of the population rebounded and death rates declined. Clearly additional demographic study is warranted to understand this trend.

The Cost of Death and Burial

The McCormick records are perhaps most useful for the information they provide on the costs associated with dying and being buried in Columbia in the first two decades of the twentieth century, as well as the styles and activities that were associated with coffins and funerals.

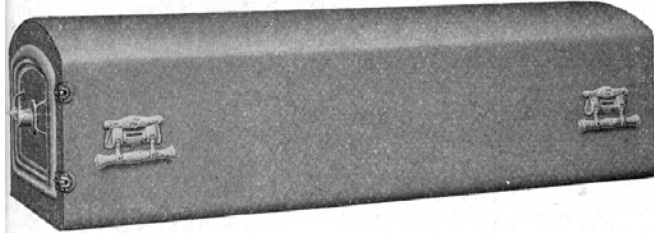

While our previous work (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b) found relatively few (about 3%) of McCormick's clients chose to pay for washing the body, this work reveals that the number continues to decline. In the current sample only 38 of 3116 (or 1.2%) chose this option. Washing cost between $5 and $15, with the average cost $5.25 ($105 in 2002$).

Most (57% of those with ages) of those who were washed were older (over 50 years) and only six (15.8%) also received embalming. The average cost of the funerals for those washed was $96.98 ($1,940 in 2002$), while the average funeral cost for those not washed was $50.75 ($1,015 in 2002$). Of course this includes a number of very inexpensive State Hospital burials, but it suggests that cost was not the deciding issue in making the decision to wash or not wash. Likewise, there is no association with the type of death involved. We believe that washing represents a dying cultural norm – an activity that was very common earlier, but by the first several decades of the twentieth century, was being replaced by embalming – those who asked that their relatives be washed were very conservative and still engaged in cultural activities that were no longer norms.

Embalming, while far more common, was still conducted on only 1172 of the 3116 named individuals – representing only 37.6% of the sample. This is consistent with our earlier estimate of about 40% from Volume 2 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b).

This finding remains very important since it helps us better understand the breakdown of resistance to embalming. Very recently Gary Laderman explained,

There are no statistical data for the number of bodies embalmed in the early decades of the century, but according to many second and third generation funeral directors, embalming rapidly became a standard feature of the undertaking work performed by their fathers and grandfathers (Laderman 2003:6).

The McCormick data for a modest metropolitan Southern city do not clearly support this view - especially when we realize that embalming began in earnest during the Civil War. With just less than two-fifths of the clientele selecting embalming in the first two decades of the twentieth century, it certainly seems that the practice was growing in acceptance, if not popularity, but to say that it was "rapidly" accepted seems to be a generalization that can't be applied to Columbia.

It may be that some of the resistance (if there was resistance, as opposed to simple poverty that precluded wide-spread acceptance) was founded on the concerns by conservative Protestants that embalming mutilated the body and rendered it adulterated, potentially affecting its ultimate resurrection.

The highest embalming charge by McCormick was $25 ($500 in 2002$) paid by 42 individuals, 24 of whom (57%) were being shipped. The lowest cost was $5 ($100 in 2002$) paid by 18 individuals. There are two peaks in the embalming cost - 455 individuals paid $10 and most of these were from the State Hospital, suggesting that the $10 was a contract price. An additional 663 individuals paid $15 - which seems to have been the typical rate. In fact, the average cost was just over $13 ($260 in 2002$).

There is good indication that embalming was used for the most elaborate funerals - the total cost of funerals with embalming averaged $106.65, with an average coffin cost of $67.36 ($1,347 in 2002$). The average funeral cost without embalming was $58.35 ($1,167 in 2002$) and the average coffin cost was $40.34 ($807 in 2002$). It seems that embalming was a status indicator, used by those desiring - or able - to spend more for their loved one.

The use of vaults continues to be relatively uncommon, with only 214 of the 3,116 individuals (7%) being buried with a vault. Our previous study found that vaults were used in only 5.8% of the cases (Trinkley 2004b), so we may be seeing the gradual increase in the acceptance of vaults as protective enclosures.

Four types of vaults are specifically mentioned – brick, slate, rolled steel, and Springfield Steel. The most common vault was slate – accounting for 146 examples (68.8% of the total). Although the cost of these slate vaults ranged from $30 to $50, most (135, or 92.5%) cost $50 ($1,000 in 2002$). Only three brick vaults are specified, one at $25 and two at $40. The single rolled steel vault cost $30 and the Springfield Steel vault cost $50 – the same as the slate vaults.

There is a fourth category where only a price was listed. In this category are two vaults for such low prices -- $5 and $10 – that we believe they likely represent only “lined” graves – graves that had boards placed in them to hold back the soil and create a temporary vault. Most of this category (55 or 90.2%) cost $50 and were likely also slate vaults, with no special notation.

Habenstein and Lamers (1955:292-306) suggest that vaults arose during the nineteenth century with various efforts to use “rock, stone, or brick” to protect the coffin – both to separate the body from the earth and to thwart grave robbers. In the late nineteenth century the efforts became progressively more elaborate as fears mounted concerning the body of a loved one being stolen for use in dissection at the local medical school. In the late 1870s and early 1880s both metal and concrete vaults became available. They note, however, that the acceptance of vaults was slow and by 1915 only 5 to 10% of all burials included a vault (and most of these were metal) (Habenstein and Lamers 1955:302). Our data is similar, although Columbia seems even less likely to accept vaults than other areas in the country.

As the threat of grave robbing diminished, vaults were increasingly promoted for their ability to protect the coffin. For example a 1912 Springfield Metallic Casket Co. advertisement for their steel vaults made preservation claims: “hermetically sealed sanitary shipping box as well as a water tight burial vault,” and “non-collapsible.” Another firm, Maxwell Sanitary Steel Vault, made similar claims of strength and rust-resistance. While the Champion Chemical Co. still referenced grave robbing, it was included with other issues: “positively protecting the remains from ghouls, vermin or moisture when buried.” While the public might no longer be concerned their beloved would be dug up for use in a medical school, it is likely that thoughts of rats and wet soils were equally as shocking.

Several of the companies emphasize that steel vaults would replace the “rough wood box” that had been used in the past. Columbia’s residents, however, continue to almost uniformly use a box, would rarely use a vault, and would most commonly use slate.

Habenstein and Lamers only briefly mention slate vaults, noting that they came into use “somewhat later in the [nineteenth] century. . . before the more easily manufactured concrete vaults appeared” (Habenstein and Lamers 1955:295-297). This is a rather vague generality since slate vaults are advertised contemporaneously with metal vaults at least as late as 1920 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b).

Earlier we had assumed that slate vaults were less expensive than metal and this price difference accounted for their wide-spread use. That is no longer a tenable hypothesis – both steel and slate were being offered at exactly the same price. Columbia residents, however, chose slate, perhaps because of a strong conservative tendency that avoided new concepts. There might even have been some distrust that metal would survive in the highly acidic and moist soils of Columbia – while slate was known to function well.

While vaults were being used at a number of different cemeteries, 158 of them – or 74% – were destined to be placed in Elmwood. Another 22 were used at Trinity. Consequently, there seems to be strong association between vaults and higher-status burials. This is borne out by comparing the average funeral costs with the use of a vault -- $220.24 ($4,405 in 2002$) – to the cost of those funerals without a vault – $66.09 ($1,322 in 2002$).

Turning to the issue of coffins, the McCormick records provide a wealth of detailed information. As previously mentioned, a few of the entries show two prices – one for the coffin and the other (lower) price for an exterior box, sometimes a “shipping box,” that was used in lieu of a vault. These are relatively uncommon (18 examples) and for our purposes here we have combined these costs.

The average cost of a casket was $51.45 ($1,029 in 2002$)(up from our earlier sample average of $45.34), with a low of only $3 ($60 in 2002$)(for an African American who was buried without any other services) and a high of $625 ($12,500 in 2002$) spent for a McKinley copper lined coffin with mahogany outer box by the family or friends of C.R. Potter.

Used for the burial of President McKinley, the coffin was manufactured by Hinged Inner Top contains a full Length Oval Plate Glass, and rests on a Shelf or flange fitted with a double row of Gaskets. In addition to the Gaskets, it has a Groove to receive Metallic cement [probably a lead paste] which guarantees a perfect sealing joint.

The Interior is lined throughout with fine Silk Hand Tufting. Hand Tufted Body, Pillow. Mattress of the finest quality Silk throughout. Massive Hardware finished to match.

Most other coffins were not nearly this elaborate - and for most we can only guess at manufacturer and appearance. There are a number of coffins (1706) identified only by a number - such as 51, 210, 2210, or 9637. These represent a maker's model number. While it might, with additional research, be possible to identify the possible manufacturers, without knowing McCormick's suppliers this would only be a guess. For example, we have matched at least three numbers - 52, 54, and 960 - with Boyertown coffins of the ca. 1910 period. While it is likely that these three are, in fact, Boyertown coffins, we can't be certain.

There are an additional 1,398 coffins identified by name, a name and number combination, or a number and letter combination.

Some of these are clearly identified, such as 1070 Springfield - allowing us to know that the number is one of Springfield Metallic Coffin Co.'s models. We do not, however, have a Springfield catalog that uses numbers - all those we have seen use what were known as telegraph names, such as McKinley, Nevada, Tabor or Bradford.

Of the names listed we have been able to identify only one - the Kinard coffin is another Springfield model identified as a lead coated steel half couch with an inner top with half glass plate.

There are several coffins identified only by the manufacturer, including Boyertown and Springfield - both very large period manufacturers.

Finally, there are a few coffins with descriptive terms. For example there are G.W. coffins, meaning "gloss white." There are also "still born" coffins, likely a reference to a small and inexpensive box. There are coffins referred to as "blind drape" and "carved corner," both specific references to the design.

When the coffins are examined by price range we see that most represent relatively inexpensive boxes - nearly 2/3s cost $50 or less. This is certainly affected by the large number of $10 coffins provided to State Hospital patients, but it may also be reflective of our country's low average family income in 1914 – only $627 ($12,540 in 2002$).

Within each cost range shown in Figure 9 there is one coffin that was used most commonly. While these may represent the coffins that were routinely kept in stock, most manufacturers advertised that orders would ship the next day – allowing an undertaker such as McCormick to maintain a very low overhead while providing superior service to clients. The reliance on a very few styles may suggest that McCormick steered clients toward particular models or manufacturers, perhaps based on performance or perhaps based on where he received his best terms.

Regardless, for the least expensive coffins the most common model was the “York,” accounting for about 30%. An additional 52 of the coffins described only as “A” account for 23%.

For the 604 coffins ranging in price from $11 to 20, most (47%) were described only as “B,” with the model “A” accounting for an additional 41%.

In the $21 to $30 range there are 513 examples, with most (221 or 43%) being style “B” coffins. There are 182 coffins in the category of $31 to $40 and over a third of these (66) are #15 coffins. There were 310 coffins sold between $41 and $50 – 44.2% of these were style #200. Of the 177 coffins sold at $51 to $60, nearly 70% are style #209. This same coffin accounts for nearly 71% of those coffins priced between $61 and $70.

Of the 290 coffins selling for $71 to $80, 64% are style #1210. In the $81 to $100 price range McCormick sold 180 coffins, with 56% being style #81.

Beyond this price range there are no longer any clear dominant styles. For example, in the next price range of $101 to $150 there are 163 examples. Most of these – or 24 (14.7%) are not specified by model. Models #1210 and 5030 each account for 11 sales, or about 7% each. It seems that there was much individuality in the higher-end coffins. Alternatively McCormick may have kept none in stock, so there was no one or two models that clients could be steered toward. Instead, they may have had the luxury of ordering directly out of several catalogs – significantly expanding on their options.

We have previously suggested that the coffin was a very important aspect of McCormick’s funeral service (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b). The current data continue to reinforce that view. The average burial cost was $76.65 with a range of $4 for a Door of Hope Hospital burial to $757.50 for William A. Heath. As mentioned earlier, the coffins alone ranged from $3 to $625, with an average of $51.45. Consequently, at the low end the coffin represented 75% of McCormick’s bill while at the high end it represented 82.5%. On average the coffin price represented just over two-thirds of the total funeral cost. These percentages are all consistent with our earlier findings (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b).

With additional research (especially the recovery of price lists appropriate to the time period) it should be possible to begin estimating McCormick’s markup on these coffins – allowing an estimation of his overall profit margin.

We do have one catalog providing the price – $8 – for a 6/0 pine box in 1927 (Norwood Casket Company Price List dated August 1, 1927). When converted to 1910 dollars this would be about $4.10 and perhaps reflects what McCormick would pay for a relatively well finished pine coffin. This is likely what he was selling for $10, reflecting a 150% markup on the wholesale cost, at least for this one product.

We have also identified chestnut boxes in a Boyertown Burial Casket Co. Daybook from 1910 being sold for $10 ($200 in 2002$). These, or something very similar, were being sold by McCormick at about the same time for $25 ($500 in 2002$) – also a 150% markup.

In this same daybook were several Boyertown caskets with numbers identical to those in the McCormick inventory – one, the 54, was sold by Boyertown for $3.75 to $5.25, depending on size. McCormick was selling this number for $20 to $25. Boyertown was also selling “still born” coffins for .75¢ to .90¢. McCormick was selling “still born” coffins for $7 to $10 (sometimes including a outer box).

We need to also factor in that most merchants offered some sort of terms. The Boyertown Daybook, for example, indicates that almost all clients received terms of 5% and 30 days, meaning a 5% discount if paid within 30 days – further improving the profitability of coffin sales.

There seems to be little doubt that McCormick made a handsome profit on coffins, although we are not in a position to speculate on the overall profit.

McCormick also itemizes coffin handles and plates. It appears that when handle charges were applied they were for “extras” – something better than would normally be found on the particular coffin. Also entered are some charges – ranging between $1 and $5 – for engraved plates (with an average cost of $3.10). The Boyertown Daybook lists similar plates wholesaling for 31¢ to 80¢, depending on the design. Again, these small items provided good profits, but given their low volume of use (only five were purchased over the nine plus years covered by Volumes 3-8), McCormick may well have found them far more trouble than they were worth.

There were, in addition, a variety of additional charges, even if they were seemingly small. For example, McCormick offered a wide range of clothing items for the deceased and these were used by 1258 or about 40.4% of his clientele.

The garments offered included pantaloons, silk gloves, slippers, socks, shirts, underwear, suits, dresses, wrappers, and robes.

There are only seven examples of a shroud being used and six of a sheet. Three of the six using sheets were State Hospital patients. These, and at least two of the remaining three, were being shipped. These sheets varied in cost from $1 to $5. It seems that the reference to sheets probably refer to what were sometimes called winding sheets, were placed under the body in the coffin and folded over the body as the lid was closed. While the lid was open they would be pulled back and extended over the sides. The body was not actually “wound” in the sheet in the late nineteenth century, but was simply covered. Usually the body would be dressed in some other clothing.

In the nineteenth century a shroud, among Christian populations, was a backless garment with sleeves, usually with ruffling to decorate the front that covered the body from neck to feet. Being backless, they were easily placed on the corpse, giving it the appearance of being clothed while minimizing the labor involved. This, of course, is very different from Jewish shrouds, or tahrim, that include a shirt, pants, head and face covering, and belt. In both religions, however, the shroud, lacking pockets (for the accumulation of wealth) and being of a relatively standard form, provided equality in death and avoided the embarrassment at not being able to afford lavish burial clothes. These have historically been made of linen (which, at least early on, reflected the religious belief that Christ was buried in linen), cotton (in the South probably a matter of socioeconomic status since it was so common and affordable) or occasionally wool.

The shrouds were used by three State Hospital patients, one hospital patient, one child, and two elderly adults. Although the State Hospital patients and child seem to have had families of limited means, the two elderly individuals had relatively elaborate funerals. We are inclined to think that shrouds were still being used by a few individuals out of a sense of tradition. Costs ranged from $5 to $15 ($100 to $300 in 2002$).

The robe was a late nineteenth or early twentieth modification of the shroud. It was still backless, but was updated to reflect more normal clothing - such as a shirt, blouse, or coat. McCormick offered robes ranging in cost from $2.50 to $18, with most invoiced out at $5. While there were different robe models (the two that are mentioned are 50 and 676), the range in prices suggests that the markup on this item allowed McCormick considerable flexibility. Therefore, a robe might be priced at $2.50, or $3.00, or $3.10, or $3.50, or $3.80 - or at $8.00, $8.50, or $9.00 - whatever would keep the funeral costs within the family's budget.

Robes were provided in black, brown, cream, white, and gray. The color is specified on relatively few of the robes, but black seems to have been preferred, followed by white, then gray.

The next most common clothing item was a suit, acquired by 125 families. Prices ranged from $4.50 to $35, although most were $15 ($300 in 2002$) - about mid-range. The Boyertown Burial Casket Daybook reveals that at least this wholesaler was selling suits from $5.50 to $6.25 - providing McCormick with perhaps 140% to 170% markup.

There are not a comparable number of shirts sold, so it appears that while families may not have had a suit appropriate for burial, most did have a shirt.

For women the most common clothing item was a dress, acquired by 78 families. These ranged in cost from as little as $1 to as much as $20, with silk dresses commanding the higher prices. Dresses were being sold by the Boyertown Burial Case Co. with prices ranging from as little as $3 to as high as $13.50, depending on the style. It is uncertain what McCormick was selling for $1, although it may have been provided at a loss. Dresses in the $15 to $20 range suggest that McCormick was again making around 140% profit on the wholesale.

There were also seven "wrappers" sold. These are loose fitting house dresses. Prices ranged from $20 to $25. Perhaps the most unusual clothing item was a habit, purchased at a cost of $5.00 for Helena Hargrove, who died of senility in the State Hospital at the age of 70.

Another very common item offered by McCormick were gloves for those participating in the funeral. These were purchased by 604 of the families (just under a fifth of the total and less than our earlier sample). They were typically offered for .25¢ a pair, but were occasionally discounted. The most common quantity purchased was four pair. The largest quantity purchased was 28 pair for the funeral of Andrew Crawford - a well known Columbia attorney (Hennig 1936:165). Crawford's funeral included 14 carriages and a flower wagon, but was otherwise rather modest in terms of coffin price and other expenses.

Gloves were, however, still strongly associated with higher status - or at least more

Other services included providing candles for the various services and viewings - with a charge of .10¢ per candle. McCormick also provided various advertising services, such as placing funeral notices in the various papers. A range of other charges, such as telegraph, telephone, bridge tolls, and express (i.e., railroad) transportation were also charged to clients, presumably at the actual cost.

Other charges common for funerals included the hearse, with a typical charge of $5 when used locally and $10 to $25 when used in the "country," meaning outside the city. Carriages were less expensive, being provided at $2 to $5. The "service wagon" is noted occasionally in the records, typically for the removal of a body. This charge was generally $5. Occasionally there is a notation for the removal of a body - generally at $2. There are also notations of an ambulance, charged out at $3. Hacks, probably for the transportation of the

There were also some pass-along charges.

The typical cemetery charge in Columbia over this period was about $5-$6. Ranges may perhaps reflect the location in the cemetery, the depth of the grave, or the actual services provided by the organization - we can't be certain with the information provided by McCormick.

When we examine the "sliding scale," (Figure 11) a

For example, there are charges for lots at Elmwood ranging from $27.50 to $83 ($550 to $1,660 in 2002$), as well as opening graves and cleaning lots. There are also occasional charges for items or services ranging from flower wagons to wreaths to crosses, and even disinterring bodies.

few observations are clear. First, even the City attempted to collect something for the burial of individuals in the "public" cemetery - the area below Randolph along the river. Considering the evidence that the City provided virtually no services or upkeep, the low charge must be related only to the opening and closing of the grave. It is likely that families unable to pay even this small amount would select a site and open and close their own grave.

A final category of costs are those associated with the actual burial at a particular cemetery in the Columbia area. Table 1 provides a list of the various cemeteries, their charges (or ranges), and the number of burials present. There are also a few locations where burials occurred for which no charges were assessed, including 13 burials in Olympia Cemetery, 14 burials at St. Andrews Lutheran, and 18 burials in the "Country."

That Lower Cemetery also charged leads

It's important to understand that these are charges assessed by the institution for the burial - opening and closing the grave - not the charge for the lot itself. For example, while Elmwood might charge $1 to $21.50 for the burial, it also collected between $27.50 and $83 for lots, depending on their size and location. For example, half lots at Elmwood ranged from $27.50 to $78.50, a small lot in a better location cost $65.75, and a full sized typical lot cost $53.

us to question whether Lower was simply another term for public and, if not, who was collecting this money.

Most other institutions maintained their charges at or below $6 – representing the norm for the Columbia area. The institution that exceeds this norm the most is Elmwood and they were likely able to charge such high prices because of its prestige, location, or maintenance. Trinity, while not as high priced as Elmwood, did charge above the norm, likely a reflection of the Cathedral’s prestige in Columbia.

One of the cemeteries charging above the norm is Randolph, an African American cemetery that is today sadly neglected and in deteriorating condition. Randolph’s charges were about equal in range to Trinity and their average – $5.60 – is actually higher than Elmwood (at $5.38).

Of the 355 African American burials, only 305 have the burial location and of these only 14 are in Columbia. Eleven of these were buried in Randolph, one in Public, and two in Lower. The funeral costs for those in Randolph ranged from $31 to $226, with an average of $64.02. The one burial in Public cost $48 and the two in Lower cost $12.50 and $20. Clearly Randolph was the cemetery of choice for African Americans in Columbia.

Figure 12 provides an overview of the different cemeteries in Columbia and their use according to the McCormick ledgers. Figure 13 reveals, however, that however useful these documents are to a clearer understanding of Columbia area burial grounds, most of McCormick’s clients did not stay in Columbia. Many of those being shipped out of Columbia are patients who died at the State Hospital – again revealing that this contract work was a very important part of McCormick’s business success.

Summary

While we have no doubt that the McCormick records will be heavily used by genealogists seeking information on individuals dying in the Columbia area, they also represent an extraordinary resource for demographic, social, and anthropological research. They offer an opportunity to explore the business of a funeral director during a period of transition or evolution away from family care to institutional care.

Of special importance is the information provided by details of burial expenses charged by McCormick since this information helps establish some baselines for future comparison and study. While there are many similarities between these volumes and our earlier sample (Trinkley and Hacker 2004b), we are perhaps seeing that Columbia was gradually becoming more accepting of the undertaking profession – certainly McCormick’s business was increasing. Nevertheless, there is still strong evidence that Columbia, by the middle of the second decade of the twentieth century, was not yet comfortable with embalming or many of the features that are today common in the funeral industry. We continue to see Columbia in a period of transition – with ties to handling death at home still very strong and the concept of an outside death authority still not fully accepted.

We anticipated that as additional volumes were transcribed, we would be able to more clearly see patterns. We believe that this is the case, helping us to better understand how funerals were conducted, what they cost, and what families felt were necessary features.

Our research also reveals gaps in our current understanding. For example, we are in need of better wholesale pricing for the various goods offered by McCormick. That information would better allow us to calculate McCormick’s profit margin and how he operated his business. At this point we believe that there were at least some high profit margin items that McCormick used to adjust the total cost of a funeral. We also believe that many of the items offered by McCormick may have had a markup of 150%.

We also need a wider variety of catalogs to help us correlate those items offered by McCormick with specific vendors. This information would help us understand the waxing and waning of various coffin styles. It would also help us to understand McCormick's business dealings, exploring whether he was focused on several manufacturers or perhaps on the best prices he could obtain from a wide variety of wholesalers.
