HARVEST DINNER PUTS PEANUTS IN THE CULINARY SPOTLIGHT

STORY BY EVA MOORE • PEANUT PHOTOS BY MARIANNE COPELAN

Peanuts are used in thousands of food products, and found in many forms — peanut oil, peanut butter, peanut flour — in kitchens everywhere. But when it comes to high-end dining, peanuts have seldom been a focal point all on their own.

A dinner being hosted in October by the South Carolina Peanut Board along with Columbia's F2T Productions, Management and Catering aims to change that.

the peanut man at the State House grounds, the Cromer's monkeys at Dutch Square Mall."

"Now I love that everyone is taking boiled peanuts to another level with spices and different flavors, and you see peanut hummus on menus and more," she added. "I am looking forward to seeing what our chefs create at this dinner."

Copelan says she'll use the dinner as an opportunity to help the participating chefs learn about peanuts.

"I feel like peanuts do not often get the attention they deserve, so on this night our goal is to highlight the peanut crop in a positive manner," said Marianne Copelan, a marketing specialist with the South Carolina Department of Agriculture who serves as director of the South Carolina Peanut Board and Virginia-Carolina Peanut Promotions.

Vanessa Driscoll Bialobreski is managing partner and founder of F2T Productions, which hosts farm-to-table events at the Columbia farm City Roots. She says the NUT'n but Love for S.C. Peanuts Dinner will make peanuts the star of the show.

"We want to showcase how versatile the peanut is in dishes and the history of it," Bialobreski said. "It is such a Southern staple, and I know for me holds fond memories of having peanuts in a glass Coke bottle from the gas station with my dad,

"Everyone can go to their local grocery store and buy a bag of in-shell peanuts, but you can't just run to a peanut farm in most states in the U.S.," Copelan said. "Well, in Columbia, the nearest peanut farm is about 30 miles southeast of the city."

Because the dinner falls during the September-through-November peanut harvest season, Copelan says this is a perfect time to show the chefs how peanuts grow. During harvest, machines first dig the peanut plants out of the ground, then leave them in rows for two to five days to "wind row dry." The peanuts are then harvested with a combine and sent to peanut buying points, where SCDA inspectors grade them before they're sent to processors.

"This dinner is a great opportunity to meet South Carolina peanut growers and agriculture community leaders, and to enjoy some delicious food and drinks," Copelan said. "We hope people will come out and support us."

The NUT'n but Love for S.C. Peanuts Dinner will be held Tuesday, Oct. 22, 2019, at City Roots in Columbia. For more information or to buy tickets, visit f2tproductions.com.

PART OF THE TEAM

Hurricane Dorian has passed, but hurricane season continues — and the South Carolina Department of Agriculture has many roles when it comes to disaster response.

First, the department has a seat on South Carolina's emergency operations team, specifically on a unit called Emergency Support Function (ESF) 11 that works with schools, food banks, USDA, and other agencies and partners to coordinate food during an emergency. When the governor declares a state of emergency and the state Emergency Management Division activates this unit, SCDA employees take shifts at the SCEMD headquarters in West Columbia to help staff the team. I have been there before and after several storms, and have seen how the center bustles with activity, with big screens and consoles everywhere, phones ringing, and people working around the clock to keep South Carolinians safe.

SCDA's Rapid Response Team also plays a role before, during, and after disasters. We reach out to the food and animal feed manufacturing and distribution facilities we inspect, advising them on how to handle power outages, dispose of ingredients, or deal with the aftermath of a flood.

After the emergency passes, we'll follow up to help them assess any damages and determine next steps.

In addition, our Consumer Protection Division's lab can assist in testing for food and feed safety after a disaster. Even our facilities have a role in disasters: The Federal Emergency Management Agency, or FEMA, sometimes uses the State Farmers Market property for staging equipment, materials, or resources. And we've had employees help with disaster recovery as members of the National Guard and volunteer groups.

Throughout a disaster, of course, SCDA's special concern is farmers and agribusinesses. We stay constantly in touch with those we serve, gathering information on crop losses and other damage. After the danger passes, we work with USDA and other agencies to calculate the impact to agriculture. Armed with that information, we can work with the governor's office and state and federal lawmakers to help target aid.

Our farmers in South Carolina have endured several devastating years in a row. We're thankful that the South Carolina legislature and Congress have recognized the importance of supporting farmers through these disasters, and we'll keep putting in the work to help.

CLEMSON LAUNCHES HEIFER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM AT EDISTO REC

BY DENISE ATTAWAY, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

BLACKVILLE – A new Forage Heifer Development Program is being initiated this year at the Edisto Research and Education Center that researchers say will add to the success of the South Carolina cattle industry.

Scott Sell, Clemson research associate at the Edisto REC, said this new program follows the spirit of the Edisto Forage Bull Test.

“Our goals are to provide an outlet for producers to consign females to the program and have them evaluated, bred, and sold in a university-led program,” Sell said. “This program also provides an opportunity for producers to buy heifers with the confidence that university tests provide.”

This program focuses on new and emerging tools available to commercial cattlemen such as genomic testing and rankings, as well other reproductive management tools. Sell said the program will give more producers an opportunity to conduct these tests on their cattle.

“Some producers would conduct these tests, but many won't unless their cattle are enrolled in a university research setting such as this,” Sell said. “Lack of dependable labor and the fact many of our producers are part-time producers contribute a lot to them not doing this on their own.”

A total of 80 heifers will be accepted into the program this first year. Heifers must be nominated for the program. The nomination deadline is Nov. 1. Eligible heifers must be homegrown, born between Sept. 1, 2018, and Jan. 31, 2019, and weigh a minimum of 700 pounds. A nomination fee of $75 is due when each heifer is delivered to the test facility. This nomination fee will be applied toward the cost of the evaluation. The delivery date is December 10.

The program will be steered by a committee consisting of Clemson researchers and South Carolina cattle producers. Sell said this is the first program of this kind in the state and “is a work in progress.” The sale date for heifers in the program is May 16, 2020.

Other rules for the program, as well as an online entry form, can be found at clemson.edu/extension/bulltest/hdhp/.
