QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

- How can I repay my overpayment?

Overpayments may be repaid in weekly, bi-weekly or monthly installments. Payments can be made by electronic funds transfer, money order, a personal or cashier's check. If you are working and your employer agrees to it, you may voluntarily have your employer garnish your wages.

- What can happen to me if I do not make regular payments on my overpayment?

You could be subject to prosecution which could result in you being fined a maximum of $100.00 and/or sentenced to 30 days in jail for each week you were held overpaid. If you are currently working, the Department may have your wages garnished until the overpayment is repaid in full.

- Can the overpayment amount be taken out of my unemployment benefits?

If you are currently filing for benefits and are eligible, your benefits will be applied each week until the overpayment is fully recovered. The overpayment can not be deducted from your maximum benefit amount in a one time application.

- Can the overpayment amount be deducted from my State tax refund?

If you fail to make regular payments, your overpayment balance will be sent to the SC Department of Revenue and any entitled refund will be intercepted and sent to the Department to apply to your existing overpayment. Also, be aware that this process will incur an additional cost to you of $25.00.

ELECTRONIC FUNDS TRANSFER

What is it? It's a service by which you authorize the South Carolina Department of Employment & Workforce to transfer funds from your checking or savings account to repay your overpayment. This comes to added benefits to you by the following:

BENEFITS

- No late payments.
- No more writing checks.
- No more buying stamps and envelopes.
- No fear of legal action - If your overpayment was categorized as fraud and your payments are current, this avoids potential prosecution.

STARTING THE PROCESS

The entire process takes only a few minutes to get started and will stop automatically when your overpayment has been repaid in full. For more information on this service or help in getting this service, please contact our Collections Unit at 803-737-2387.
